B565 and B248 Brass Punches

Starrett Drive Pin Punches have long been one of our most popular products. Our 565 Series of punches have such a wide variety of uses that they are a vital part of almost every tool box.

A variation of these products, the 248 Series extended length punches are also very popular. They are particularly useful for motor service work and machine shop applications.

Brass Pin Punches -- Ideal for Delicate Work

Now, we have added Brass Drive Pin Punches to our product line. The B565 Series brass punches, and the extended length B248 Series are ideal for delicate work.

Our regular punches, made of hardened, tempered steel withstand heavy duty work, but at times are too hard and can damage softer materials. The new brass punches are ideal for these applications as they are much softer than the steel version.

In some applications, a good approach is to use a brass punch to gently produce the initial movement of delicate work, then finish the job with a steel punch.

The disadvantage of brass punches is the same as their advantage – they are softer than hardened steel and consequently, less able to stand up to years of hard use.

Ideally, it is good to have sets of both types and use the brass punches only when there is the possibility of damage to the work piece.
